Kenneth Corkum, Held by Ellis Island Inquiry Board, Turned Over to Captain of Foundered 4-Master

ad Faced Death Bravely

He Cut Line Holding Boat to Sinking Vessel Just Before She Took Plunge

Members of a special board of incity at Ellis Island may have been bt for several days as to what to with thirteen-year-old Kenneth um, but that was before they had heard from Captain A. S. Publicover what happened to the good ship J. Edward Drake on an August night 600 miles east of the Bermudas, and what happened to nine men and a boy after they had deserted the foundervessel to take refuge in a small ing vessel that hifeboat.

The boy was Kenneth Corkum. He proved himself, the captain said, as brave and as gallant a lad as ever shipped to sea, a boy who faced death without a whimper and who lived for three days with nine others on a box of sardines and some water-sonked bread. It was such a boy as this that the captain wanted to adopt, and in asking the release of Kenneth he told his story.

his story.

The J. Edward Drake, a big fourmaster, sailed from New York early last month with a cargo of lumber for Montevideo, South America. It was a trip that promised no adventure. At the outset, however, the rather unpiguresque J. Edward Drake experienced rough weather and as she plowed southward the weather became rougher. When she reached a point 600 miles east of the Bermudas she struck the tail end of a hurricane. The hurricane was stronger than the J. Edward Drake. The four-master almost turned urtle under the fury of the storm. Its crew of ten, including the captain and Kenneth Corkum, rushed to a lifebat, set fire to the foundering vesual and ceased thinking of Montevideo at everything save personal safety. sat and ceased thinking of Montevideo of everything save personal safety. In our little dory," said Captain phileover, his eyes filling with tears, we had been tossed up and down for hours. The last flickering light was drigg out from the burning ship, to which our little craft was fastened by a long rope. One moment we would be dwn in a deep trough, the next moment far up on the crest of a huge billow. Any one of these big waves might have swamped us any moment. It was midnight when I gave orders to get the rope which bound our boat to the wrecked schooner. Kenneth had taken his post at the bow of the lifeboat, and if he hadn't severed the rope quickly the next mountain of water mrely would have sent us to the bottom or spilled us to the mercy of the as. The boy played a heroic part that hight and I'll not desert him now.

aight and I'll not desert him now.

I would rather that you tie a weight around my own neck and sink me in the hay out there than have you take this lad away from me. We have been thrown together by the hand of Fate. The boy lost both his parents when he was only eight years old. He went to live with a foster father, but wanted to try the sea life and came to me in a live with a foster father, but wanted to try the sea life and came to me in La Have, Nova Scotia, a year ago last february and begged me to take him for a life at sea. In New York they make me sign guardianship papers before they would let a boy so young goott. We have been buddies for over the last between the light search of Miss Margaret of the light search and I am going to adopt year and ruling questions. See all in that nurricane in the Guilliesm, and I am going to adopt Measth and make him my own son."
The board was willing. Captain Thilliesm and Kenneth Corkum left Ellis Island together.

Last year at a dance in Cold Springs the girl met young Kipp, who admitted he had been married in Los-Angeles and had a six-year-old son. He had divorced the boy's mother and said that he had promised his father he would never marry again until he had completed his college course. However, a rapid courtship ensued and the couple eloped to Beacon, N. Y., and were married there by a Mothodist minister.

Mr. Dale called a conference of the two families at his home.

"Mrs. Kipp was angry when she heard of the marriage," said Mr. Dale. "Mr. Kipp promised an allowance of 31,200 a year, but it was not paid, so the young couple went to work to maintain their rooms and the husband's college course."

Odessa Soviets Rebel Against Moscow Yoke

Anti-Christian Propaganda by Civil Authorities Also Is Charged in Protest

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Rebellion broke out yesterday in South Russia, according to a Helsingfors dispatch to the Central News via Copenhagen. The Odessa Soviets have declared South Russia and the Crimea independent. There is fighting in many districts between the rebels and the Soviets, the dispatch stated. The crews of warships stationed at Sebastopol also were reported to be in a state of mutiny.

MOSCOW, Sept. 8.—The forty-eight Cossacks recently convicted in Kiev in connection with an uprising against the Ukrainian government have been executed, appeals entered in their behalf having been denied.

The Moscow government has stayed the execution of eight counter revolutionists condemned at Simferopol.

There have been several reports recently of anti-Soviet outbreaks in South Russia, but none of them has been confirmed. Dispatches through Helsingfors on the Russian situation have often proved misleading in the paut, and the foregoing should be taken with all reserve.
